BULLETIN OF THE TREASURY DEPARTMENT

INTRODUCTION

This Bulletin contains statistics of the United States Government transactions and other information gathered by the Treasury Department. It is the intention to issue similar Bulletins monthly and to incorporate in them information additional to that which is included in this first issue.

The purpose of the Bulletin is to extend knowledge of the public finances, monetary developments and activities of the Treasury Department by making information available in a more compact and usable form. The material herein contained supplements or recapitulates data contained in the Daily Treasury Statement and other publications and press releases of the Treasury Department.

Only a limited number of copies is being prepared, for the present distribution will be restricted in the main to periodical publications desiring to make use of the material and to public officers. Other requests may be filled only to the extent of the limited supply.

I shall be glad to receive and to give careful consideration to suggestions for improving the Bulletin so as to make it serve its purpose more adequately.

Henry Morgenthau, Jr.
Secretary of the Treasury.

Cash Income and Outgo of the Treasury Fiscal Year 1939

(This statement includes trust accounts and money received (except proceeds from sale of obligations) and disbursed for account of Governmental corporations which use the Treasury as a depository for their funds. The excess of cash outgo, therefore, is not the same as the "budget deficit". Nor is the difference between the "Cash Income: Budget" and the "Cash Outgo: Budget" the same as the budget deficit for the reason that it does not include certain non-cash items such as the annual premium paid into the Old-Age Reserve account pursuant to the Social Security Act.)

1/ These figures do not include certain very small mines (about 250 in 1937) which shipped directly to the Mints and not to private smelters.

2/ Annual mine production, as indicated by the above summary tabulation of miners' affidavits does not agree with estimates of mine production made by the Bureau of Mines or with the figures of Mint receipts compiled by the Bureau of the Mint. Apart from the possibility of errors made in the tabulation of several hundred thousand affidavits there are a number of reasons for not expecting the above totals of domestic silver shipments to agree either with the figures for Mint receipts or with the production estimates of the Bureau of Mines. (1) Each method of estimating silver production is dependent upon a different basis of recording: in the tabulation of miners' affidavits the date of delivery of each shipment of silver at a private smelter determined the year into which such shipment fell, whereas Mint figures are based on the date of delivery of silver to the United States Mints and the Bureau of Mines figures are based upon the date of actual mine output. (2) Included in the tabulation of miners' affidavits is a substantial number of affidavits which were later cancelled because the smelting companies had sent silver, accompanied by miners' affidavits, in excess of silver actually recovered from domestically mined ore, not allowing for metallurgical losses. (3) The output of certain small mines was not tabulated as explained in the preceding footnote.
